THE DOMAIN OF DEATH.
TERRIBLE TWO MONTHS OF LIFE IN SHREVEPORT.
Mr. William Barraud, formerly of Cincinnati, and now manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company's offices in New Orleans, came to New York yesterday, direct from Shreveport, La. He was there during the whole of the epidemic, and gives to the Herald the following account of the sufferings in that pestilence-ridden city: Shreveport lies north and south along the Red River, and, before the days of the pestilence, numbered 11,000 inhabitants. The fever broke out on August 28. It became an epidemic about September 4, and 8,000 of the population at once left the city. Since that time Shreveport has been quarantined in every direction. Mails for Texas are lying there, which should have gone forward two months ago. The lowest mortality on any day of twenty-four hours was three and the highest thirty six. Up to October 25 there had been 720 deaths.

HOW THE FEVER CAME TO SHREVEPORT.
The cause of the yellow fever epidemic is not attributable to the Red River raft. Not a single case of fever or any other sickness occurred among the 140 men employed by the United States government in removing this obstruction to the upper Red River navigation.
This fact in itself puts a question on the theory of several scientists. The causes of the fearful epidemic after the appearance of the disease, are to be found in the filthy condition of the city and in the drying up of the swamps and marshes in the suburbs, producing the malaria. The violence of the contagion is directly attributable to the skinning of 200 carcasses of dead cattle and their subsequent putrefaction on the river banks, about two miles below the city. A steamer loaded with cattle sunk at that place and the negroes towed the dead animals ashore, where, after being skinned, their carcasses were left to decompose. A southwest wind, which prevails during much of that season of the year, carried the stench, which the burning sun created, into the city. This prepared the air for taking the infection. The first case of the fever however, was brought from New Orleans; but under the influences mentioned, it resolved itself into the most virulent type of Mexican black vomit. The percentage of deaths at the most violent period of the pestilence was 95 out of every 100. Sixty per cent was about the average, but there were never less than 40 deaths to every 100 persons attacked.

HOW THE FEVER CAME TO THE INDIVIDUALS.
The symptoms began with a violent pain in the head and shoulders. Heavy aches and numbness then attacked the bones in the limbs.
The fever then set in and the pulse rose to 120 or 140 per minute. The crisis of the disease arrived in about three days, when the fever left the patient; then, if the kidneys could be kept right, the case was a hopeful one. All of the deaths occurred either from black vomit, which is the complete putrefaction of the stomach, or from the entire sequestration of the urinary organs. There was hardly a case of the disease where the catheter did not have to be resorted to. The period of the disease was in each case owing to the constitution of the patient—the strongest did not survive a week.

THE MEDICAL TREATMENT.
The treatment was simply a hot mustard bath, with castor oil as a cathartic. Calomel, the old specific in this disease, was entirely discarded. Fear killed a great many. Recovery in the best cases was a matter of coolness, constitution and good luck. The shortness of the supply of nurses prompted the organization of the Howard Association in Shreveport, Mr. L.
R. Simmons being chosen President. The President of the Association in New Orleans, Mr. E. F. Smith, came at once to Shreveport with nurses and physicians. The deaths among the nurses did not exceed five. The greatest mortality among any one set was in the ranks of the Catholic clergy. They were very faithful in their ministrations on the sick and the dying. The Protestant ministers were equally fearless of death and just as indefatigable in the discharge of their sacred duty. The telegraph operators were the next heaviest sufferers in proportion to numbers, four out of six falling victims to the terrible disease.

THE FORM OF BURIAL.
There was no such thing as funeral services at the churches or at the graves. Every place of business was closed except the drug stores and liquor saloons. The churches were closed.
The funeral services were very few. The dead were reported to the Howard Association which at once detailed workmen to dig the graves. The coffin was taken to the sidewalk in front of the house. The corpse was brought from the house, put into the box and, after being closed up, the casket was placed in a wagon and driven at a gallop to the cemetery.
There it was deposited beside the undug or only partially completed grave. The grave digger was left alone with the corpse and his own thoughts. He got the box into the grave as best he could. The cemetery, and especially the Potter's field, looks like a battle field with its newly made graves.

HOW THE DISMAL DAYS PASSED.
There were no hearse to convey the bodies with some show of decorum to their last resting places. No mourners followed the corpse to the grave. Those who would have wished to go to the funeral of a friend were required at the bedside of a dying wife or child. The sick monopolized the attention of the living; the dead were regarded as beyond all help of love or affection. High and low, rich and poor were buried alike. Whole families were swept out of existence—not a member left. There are 120 little orphans who have lost both father and mother. They will be raised by the State of Louisiana.

THREATENED FAMINE IN BENGAL.—The news telegraphed to us by our Calcutta correspondent is of very serious importance. Bengal, the largest and by far the most populous of our Presidencies, is threatened with famine.
A dry season, it appears, has destroyed the autumn crop of rice, and has already endangered the crop of next spring. The authorities, it is added, are acting with promptitude, and are carefully organizing the arrangements for future relief.—London Times.

This is to Certify, That I have this day sold out to Messrs. Janney & Co., of Alexandria, Va., the sole right to prepare and sell the Matin Ague Mixture, according to the genuine recipe as formerly owned by me. ROBERT H. BROOKER.

Alexandria, Va., August 15, 1873.
The very many instances which came under our personal observation while acting as General Agents for the sale of Matin Ague Mixture, in which it effected a cure when all other remedies had failed, induced us to purchase the recipe and proprietorship of the Medicine, and enables us confidently to recommend it to our patrons and the public generally, as a most reliable and valuable preparation. JANNEY & CO.
